The only difference of opinion between the democrats and the regular republicans was over the terms of the resolution. To the extent that the democrats followed the lead the senatorial insurgents, statehoo was delayed and placed in jeopardy And when all the facts come out will be shown that the democrats in congress were for some months fooled by the self-appointed representatives from Arizona who purported to speak for the Arizona people.

If the democrats and regular re publicans had been so foolish as to heed in the final days the pleadings of these Arizona emissaries and the senatorial insurgents, statehood would

The returning apostles of the ju diciary recall will, of course, be wordy in their explanations. They will try to show that the democratic congress was hostile to statehood, that the re publican senate was hostile to state hood, and that statehood would have been lost except for the presence of these Arizona politicians at Washington. They will try to show that they are entitled to the undying grati tude of the people of the new state that they can never be fully repaid, and that to elect them to the best offices would be only a partial payment of the public indebtedness to "We done it," will be their
